

Marc Aplaoon, Adai, Maheen Siddique

Activity 4 Customer Check In Notes

4th Check In Details

- This was our last and final check-in, where we got a chance to not only get feedback from the customer, but the others working with the customer as well. Starting from our original ideas on paper, to the Figma, to now, our WordPress, a lot has changed, and that progress is obvious and can be seen through the lens of the GitHub. We can see how much we've gotten, some for better and some for worse, but in the end, we took the customer's advice and did what we could to make our website look good!
- From Activity 3 to now, some of the things we added were learning opportunities and more links to other resources that people could use, where they are not just relying on us, but also everyone around us who are willing to help. From linking to legal help, to other resource hubs, to official government websites, we made sure to explore more of what our website has to offer, and for sure added a lot more content.

Size: as for our website, we got a lot of questions beforehand about sizes of fonts, images, and just the website overall, so we tended to that and made sure that things were generally small, but still visible. From Activity 3 to now, it is easy to tell that quite a few things have changed, and one of those that are the biggest is size, similarity, and consistency

Navigation Bar: with the website, one of the other group members criticized that our navigation bar felt squished during the final check in, and so we did our best to address that, but overall, we could not do much as it was due to the CSS constraining us.

Identity: Finally, from Tim, the sponsor, he said that our website, like all others, should have more identity, more things that can differentiate us from the original website as to not get confused, where there were not identifiers. One of the suggested things was changing the logo to better reflect the Charity Hub, but that was not an option due to the timeframe we had from then until now.